SUGGESTED READING

---

Adina Turcu, MD is an assistant professor of internal medicine at Michigan Medicine, University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, Michigan.
+EMAIL: aturcu@med.umich.edu

Hema Ketha, PhD is a clinical instructor in the department of clinical chemistry and toxicology, director of toxicology and drug analysis, and associate director of clinical chemistry at Michigan Medicine, University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, Michigan.
+EMAIL: hketha@med.umich.edu

Richard Auchus, MD, PhD is a professor of internal medicine and pharmacology and director of the division of metabolism, endocrinology, and diabetes fellowship program at Michigan Medicine, University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, Michigan.
+EMAIL: rauchus@med.umich.edu

---

Get free continuing education credit for reading CLN mini-reviews. AACC designates 0.5 ACCENT® credit hours.

Visit www.aacc.org/publications/cln/accen for more information.

---

Main pathways of cortisol biosynthesis and alterations in 21OHD

F1

A, normal steroidogenesis; B, disordered steroid flux in 21OHD. Abbreviations are as used in text. Dashed arrows emphasize shift from DHEAS production to PregS and 21-deoxycorticisol; dotted arrow from 17OHP indicates poor enzyme activity.